The platform, on which the party will make its bid for continuance in power, was adopted by the resolutions committee only after a 40-hour fight waged against the farm plank by the anti-

Republican Confidence

"Bring on Smith and we will bury him!"

This defiant challenge flung at the Democratic party in the ringing speech delivered by Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, in accepting the permanent chairmanship of the Republican national convention at Kansas City yesterday, may be a slogan in the 1928 presidential campaign.

Marking as it did a departure from the usual cut and dried prepared speeches of convention chairmen, the militant appeal of the New Hampshire senator brought cheer after cheer from the delegates. Applause again swept the hall when the permanent chairman, turning his guns on the Democrats, declared "We intend to carry this fight to the enemy. And we challenge them to bring forth their strongest champion."

And the rank and file of the people stand with Senator Moses in his declaration:

"Upon the platform which we shall thus here construct, we shall place a candidate whose personality fits hands and that the leadership we shall here set up will their admission. assure to the country a Republican ascendancy which will endure for at least eight years more.

"There are at least five million reasons why this must fied the United States Constitution. be so-because there are at least five million more Republicans than there are Democrats in this country. dent Wilson urged the establishment of June 14 as Flag sador, is going to do some airplane These millions united, as we know they will be when this Day, "a day upon which e should direct our minds with traveling henceforth. The Royal Air convention has concluded its task, and joined by millions more to whom our candidates and our principles will appeal, will sweep on to a overwhelming victory at the polls."

Naming Next President

This is the quadrennial season when hope springs ete.nal in the breasts of those gentlemen, who, whether in reality or in fancy, hold the destinies of this commonwealth in their power-the politicians who will select the next president.

The Republican national convention is under way. The Democrats will foregather within a few days. Kensas City is all hubbub and hurrah. Houston is preparing itself for a lot of the same. The season of national political conventions is comparable to the coming of a circusred lemonade, ballyhoo men, the sideshows and whatnot.

But the business of a national political convention is, or it should be, at least, serious. Naming the men who will be president and vice-president during the ensuing four years, starting with the following March 4, is a tremendously important task. The guiding hand at the helm of the ship of state—hackneyed and bromide as Reverence for the Flag of the United States and combat that sentence is-may be the guiding hand of an exper- all influences, condition, and forces hostile to the Ideals. denced navigator, or it may be the inexperienced hand of Flag stands."

Traditions, Principles, and In titutions for which that Flag stands." only personal aggrandizement, irrespective of its effect on the people of the country.

As regards the Democratic convention later this month, there remains ample time for discussion of its affairs As regards the Republican convention now in session, the time is at hand to talk of what it is doing, and what It may do.

In many respects the Republican convention is the most important in the history of the party. Under Republican administration the nation has enjoyed tremendous prosperity, has reached a condition of international political importance : econd to no country in the world, and has became the wealthiest of all nations. This is a condition which must be continued- a condition which will not brook interference at this time-a condition which it has been possible to attain only because of the character of administration espoused by

Yet the men and women delegates to the Republican convention are seen by eye-witness observers as be-wildered representatives. Not that they do not know convention routine, or that capable leaders are not on the ground, but because of the enigma of Mr. Coolidge, the man whom every delegate recognized as the logical candidate for president, but who, by his silence, has divided the country between half a dozen men seeking his office.

There is no question, perhaps, of the merit of two or three of the avowed candidates for president. There is some question of the capabili ies of the others. Then, there are available within the Republican party, half a dozen others, any one of whom would measure up to the standards by which presidents have come to be judged. But the one outstanding man is Mr. Coolidge-and he sticks, so far as anyone knows, to his declaration of last summer-"I do not choose to run."

What the Republican convention must do this year is select a candidate for president and another for vicepresident who will not only measure up to Republican presidential standards, but who will command nationwide respect and prove, at the November election, to be the popular choice. If such men are nominated, there will be no question of a continuance of Republican administration and prosperity.

Nowadays boxing gloves should be part of the equipment of public officials.

HASKIN DAILY LETTER By Frederick J. Haskin -

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 14 .- One hundred and lifty-one years ago today the young American Congress neeting in Philadelphia resolved that "the Flag of the hirteen States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white on a blue field, representing a new constellation."

This resolution put the seal of approval on the flag made by Mistress Elizabeth Ross, widow of John Ross in her little shop which is now an historical landmark n that same city.

It was at the request and with the design of the committee, George Washington, Robert Morris, and Col. George Ross, appointed by the Continental congress, that Betsy Ross created the emblem cherished then by some three million people and now by more than one hundred million. Its symbolism is just as significant in the era of power and prosperity as in the time of struggle and poverty, although the design has been altered superficial y several times.

It was probably not so simple with the dozens of popu ar banners in use to decide that the stripes and the stars should signify the States, the latter not free bodies but a "constellation." It has been claimed that the colors stand for courage, liberty, and loyalty, but the definition by the young Congress can be found in its description of the United States Seal whose hues are to be those of the flag. White signifies purity and innocence red hardiness and valor, and blue, vigilance, persever

Although one of the first countries to possess a na ional flag, Denmark and Japan sharing that distinction, there has been little or no Federal regulation of its use or of its care. Officially known as the Flag of the United States, its legislative history has been important, but

There have been three Federal acts and an executive order describing it, the original description in 1777, and the others made necessary by changing conditions. Nearly eighteen years after its adoption in order to honor and recognize two new states. Vermont and Kentucky congress decreed that two stars and two stripes be added making fifteen in all.

By 1818, it became apparent that if each state which came into the Union were to be similarly bonored a clumsy and unwieldy banner would result. Then it was our principles and the nation's present necessities. We enacted that for each of five new states a star should be are not barren of presidential timber. If you can afford to play golf or handball or to join gymnasium, you have within your reach a splendid means of exercising. How Much Water Should Baby Get? A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of Bennett and Edward Shapiro. Refreshfluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him be-fore and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any than Cornrich and Edward Shapiro deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him rhea, gas on stomach and bowels, conpurely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper-and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With

129 W. 6th Street as Headquarters

—He personally wishes to consult with all sufferers of the above diseases, as he will gladly and freely relate his experiences with thousands and thousands of rheumatic sufferers throughout the country. (We wish to assure out of town people that they will be taken care of, as an assistant will be called if necessary.)

Philip D. Gaines, R. P. RHEU-GO EXPERT

Says:

I am a Rgeistered Pharmacist in two states and while attending a school of pharmacy I became interested in the treatment of rheumatism and is kindred ailmens.

After careful study and realizing the proper drugs to use for speedy relief — and if possible, these drugs oft-times destroyed or nauseated the a cure—for these diseases, also realizing that stomach—I began my study to overcome these difficulties.

As the years went by and by the aid and untiring help of a brother Pharmacist and by careful study of these well-known drugs and their action on the system, for the relief and treatment of pain and swollen joints, I finally reached the goal I had sought and perfected this well-known treatment of today.

I began to counter-prescribe this treatment and with the quick results I had with approximately a thousand cases, I decided to tell the world about it, that all sufferers might benefit by its use.

I have appeared personally in three states, namely: Indiana, W. Virginia and Ohio, and to-day this treatment is rapidly becoming known throughout the U.S. A. and some foreign countries.

Sincerely,

P. D. GAINES.

P. S.—I wish to further say, that I have been a rheumatic sufferer for fifteen years, suffering the most painful form, known as Sciatica. I have had various treatments, including the mineral baths, electrical and medical attention in various sanitariums. I WILL EXPLAIN FDLLY HOW I WAS CRUED—AT MATHEYS CUT RATE.

CUT RATE:—

Questions I will ans- } wer at MATHEWS

2—Why do thousands of people think that rheumatism can't be cured?

3 — What is the cause of RHEUMA-TISM? ASK THIS QUESTION BY ALL MEANS!

4—Why is the farmer more liable to have rheumatism than the man that lives in the city?

5—Ls there a cure for RHEUMATISM and similar diseases?

6—How many known cures are there?

7—Why are 90% of factory working people sufferers from some form of rheumatism.

8—Why do we wait until we are dangerously ILL before callign a DOCTOR? This is an important question. We do not like to look on the dark side of life—yet some times it is necessary—because we must realize as sensible people, the suffering, pain—months, and sometimes years, of torture, crippled bodies, drawn fingers, useless arms and legs, impaired sight, and so forth, that lays in wait for the diseased rheumatic sufferer.

RHEUMATISM IS A DANGEROUS, PECULIAR DISEASE OF THE BLOOD It attacks each one differently. In some so-called MILD cases, the patient has been known to become helpless in the course of a few months—a burden to his family for the rest of his life—never regaining the strong body and mind that he once possessed.

Others have been known to suffer the tortures of HELL for years and with the proper treatment, they should have been restored to normal health within a few weeks.

Rheumatism and its kindred ailments have no respect for persons, it attacks all ages and all classes, usually unexpectedly. Yet it seems that no words are deep enough to express, and no voice loud enough to sound a warning! JUNE AND JULY

The most logical time of the year to treat the above diseases.

WHY?

Because this is the time of the year we enjoy and realize the benefits of sunshine and fresh air. Nothing could be more helpful, while driving the poisons and impurities out of the ysstem, as the pores of the skin readily open and restore to nature. helpoutofurithe easj

Walking is a pleasure and exercise is very necessary, as the use of weak muscdes and defective nerves are restored to normal action.

Elimination of the waste material of the bowels are more effective because of the change in diet.

Many things must be taken in consideration in successful treatment of the above diseases.

APPEAL

We appeal to people of oll age, young or old, rich or poor, to come to Mathews and talk to the man who originated and perfected this wonderful treatment.

He has helped thousands and maybe he can be of service to you or your family or some friend that is discouraged and thinks life not worth while. Come to Mathews Cut Rate and learn of this treatment. It may be worth your while.

To grandmother who have given up hope, we appeal—to young girls and young boys who have had only a few slight attacks (blood disorders, etc.) and thinks he or she can outgrow these deadly diseases WE MOST SINCERELY APPEAL.

MR. CHAPLIN was asked to smoke each of the four leading brands, clearing his taste with coffee between smokes. Only one question was asked: "Which one do you like the best?"

How does OLD GOLD do it?

The answer is very simple. Three types of leaves grow on the tobacco plant . . . coarse, heavy topleaves, irritating to the throat . . . withered groundleaves, without taste or aroma . . . and the heart-

The latter is Don Gwinn, of the University of Pennsylvania, 5 feet 7 inches in height, 152 pounds in weight and downright gifted in a seven-foot circle. It even is conceivable that Gwinn will make many of the strong men look silly by getting a place in the first five, wherein the analogy between himself and Luby fades right out of the portrait. The Pennsylvania entry only did 150 feet on one of two unimportant occasion and never really amounted to anything in a national sense.

Yet she wondered. She didn't see the uneasy glances Kitten kept stealing through the window toward the Brents'; she only felt that she must encourage this new

Mrs. Haiden had invited her to dinner at the Yacht Club that evening and it occurred to her that Kitten would be a pleasant addition to the party.

"I'll ask Frances, dear. But I'm sure she'd like to have you. Want to come?"

"Do I! Well, just try to stop me! Say, that's grand of you, Em. You're kind of a nice ole thing after all."

It was settled that Emily would telephone after speak-Ing to Frances. So, with the best of intention, she paved the way to the very end of the tricky road her sister already was traveling. Kitten's jubilance died out when she saw Stella coming across the lawn. She made a frightened movement toward the door; then a hard, bright defiance took possession of her and she went on washing the dishes.

"Hear the racket over at our place last night?" Stella wanted to know. "And still going strong. Father stayed home today talking his head off and there she sits looking like the very devil and not a word out of her!"

"Oh, is it Dottie? Why, Stell—"
"I'll say. Came home lit." Stella looked sharply at Kitten but the golden eyes met hers without a quiver.
Emily was white with horror. "But where had she been, Stell? And your father doesn't let her out nights.
How terrible!"

"Climbed through the window, I s'pose." With an other glance at Kitten. "Won't say where she was or who with. She's locked in her room now and I bet it'll be some time before she does any more stepping. Know anything about it, Kitten?"

Kitten's eyes were green abruptly. "Why should I? Don't tell me her troubles. Not the talking kind, I'll fell the world."

'Maybe," Stella said wryly. "But Dot'll talk before she gets through with this. Got to go now." She paused long enough to whisper to Emily. It was all right about Skeets, she said. She had seen him and they had made up. "I'm so glad dear. "You're happy again? I hope it's

But Emily didn't believe it was. Stella was too rest less to be happy. She'd never feel sure of Skeets. Kitten watched and drew a long breath when Stells disappeared through the hedge. "Dot'll talk before she bets through with this," she had said. That kept knocking at her brain, sending icy trickles along her nerves.

What would happen when Dot began to talk?

For the first time in her blithe young life Kitten was afraid.

Three nights a week there was dancing at the Yacht Club and this was one of the nights.

Frances had taken her guests there early, rather proud of the attention they attracted; two well-dressed. beautiful girls, shy-mannered and sweet, each so vividly distinctive.

The one all romance, pastel-shaded, exquisitely dainty with her pale fluff of hair and gray eyes shining; the other vital as a flame. Kitten wore the gown Emily's money had bought; it was shimmering emerald around her slim little figure and it brought out hot, exciting lights in her hair.

They lingered at the table and presently the orchestra came. Older people finished their dinners and went away and their places were taken by young folks who laughed and chattered and began to dance. Through the glow which came to her when she felt herself touching, however casually, upon the world in which Kent Rossiter moved, Em'y caught sight of a face she recognized. Bronzed skin, deep, intent eyes . . .

Nicky Wickert sauntered over and sat down, uninvited in the fourth place at the table.

"No use expecting me to hop around out there, Frances told him ungraciously. "You know I don't. And the girls aren't dancing tonight, either."

He flash '.. half smile at Emily but she shook her head. "It's that long since I've danced. Wouldn't know how to bigin." Frances, she saw, wasn't going to introduce him to Kitten who leaned forward with her lips parted, eyes shining. An awkward moment and Emily heard herself saying nervously, "Mr. Wickert, Kitten. My sister—"

He surveyed them with a pleased humor, ignoring Frances. "Little sister dances? Listen to that music!"

And they were out on the floor while Frances watched with her lips tight. She said, only, "That was unwise, Emily. You shouldn't have done that."

And when Kitten came back she signed the check and took the girls away, rather sitently.

Kitten sulked a bit. But she had a thing to remember; a dark, handsome face bending down to hers, a low voice. A strange, persistent 'hrill rushing over her a delicious sense of adventure. Ted never made her "Been looking for you a long time, lamb child. Saw you once and I've been haunting that corner. But you never came.' She gave him a quick, teasing smile and said, auda-clously, "Glad you found me now?" He caught her so close then that she missed a step the wondered breathlessly if Emily had seen. "Going to meet me some afternoon?"

"Am I!" "I'll be waiting. Like to drive? How about dinner somewhere?"

She remembered Dottie suddenly and wondered if they had made her talk yet. Something unpleasant would be sure to h ppen when Pottie began to talk. But the dance ended and she felt his lips brush her hair before he le her g.

CHAPTER 31.

Every morning when Emily went to the shop there would be a box with her name on it hanging to the door

She would remove it, flushing a little, and wait until she had taken off her hat and tidled up the rooms before opening it. It seemed almost that r'e wished to delay this moment. Yet when she had untied the cord the tissue wrappings would give up a bouquet, fresh and lovely, always pack-

Sometimes there would be a whimsical and affectionate little note, but never a card.. Still that wasn't necessary. Kingdon Coles sent her the flowers. Each morning that had gone since that ride up the Storm King Road he had done this.

A bunch of vic'ets, a flutter of sweet-peas, pale pink and lovely like herself; perhaps two or three golden orchids, sophisticated and fragile. Very beautiful t'ev were, very colorful. Yet never fragrant. "Hot house flowers," she would tell herself. "Blossoms forced into being—well, they'd have no perfume. Smell of the sun and the clean wind—not for them. Gorgeous but not sweet. They fill the eye, never the heart. And it would seem to her that someway they symbolized her relationship to Coles.

She tried very hard to love him. She had given her word, or almost had given it, that she would be his wife one day. And she felt a tenderness was due him, something of the shining lilt Kent had stirred in her.

But that, she would tell herself, could not be. Only a gream it was; one of those radiant dreams that never

So she would fi'l the jus that "ttered the shop with the flowers feeling rather restless and protesting. She never carried a blossom home; never slipped one between the pages of a book. She enjoyed their beauty but they inspired her with no sentiment.

Marty had taken to wandering in occasionally, often mornings when she was likely to be alone. He would glance at two or three bouquets standi ; about and nod in an amused way.

"I see frail Percival's been saying it with flowers," he would observe as if sharing a rare joke.

"That will do, Marty. And the next time you follow me I'm not going to keep it to myself."
"Thinking of telling him?" With a pleased grin.
